

Well, folks, we have made it to December 23rd. Hopefully all of you have finished “decking the halls” and are ready for a “silent night” tomorrow evening. (As a side note, on this day each year, I put aside the wrapping paper and ribbon in favor of gift bags for those last few gifts, but no one seems to mind.)

Last week I got an early Christmas present from Moose’s neurologist – a positive prognosis! Although we had returned for a check-up because of a subtle recurrence of symptoms, the doctor was pleased with Moose’s overall progress and said he expects him “to get back to where we want him to be.” He made a tweak to his medications and sent us on our (very) merry way!

Moose wanted to join me in sending warm Christmas wishes to all of you. We hope your holiday season is filled with peace, joy, and love, and that together we can somehow spread this message around the world.
